'Red Hill' Boys' Home Grows

The second cottage in the planned Patrick Henry Boys' Plantation at Red Hill, Charlotte county, was dedicated in ceremonies on Thursday afternoon.

The cottage, finished last fall, is now occupied by 12 of the 15 boys whom it was built to accommodate, and their house parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Wingfield, who moved in late in 1963.

This new cottage, together with the first one dedicated in 1959, now provides a home for 20 boys.

In welcoming the approximately 75 guests, Dr. James D. Hagood, president of the foundation organization, called the project "a living memorial to Patrick Henry" and asked, "What could be more fitting than to raise a boy to cherish and revere Patrick Henry's memory and follow in his footsteps?"

100 Boys is Hope

Officers and trustees of the plantation hope, Dr. Hagood said, that the spacious grounds will eventually be filled with enough cottages to house 100 boys, gymnasium, chapel, infirmary, and other buildings needed in response to the growing need to provide a home for orphans and homeless boys.

Dr. William P. Quillian, president of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, in his dedicatory address also referred to Patrick Henry as hero and standing for the basic ideals of America.

"A hero must be dedicated and have a worthy ideal which lifts him up above himself. He must be involved in a struggle — on a battle line of some sort," win through complexity from a simplicity which amounts to little, to a simplicity which means much. Dr. Quillian said. Henry's battle line, or complexity, was the battle for men's minds for democratic ideals.

Henry for National Unity

When Washington asked Henry if he would run for the Virginia assembly after he had refused to run for national office, Henry agreed, and three months before his death in 1799, gave a strong appeal for national unity - for which he had been struggling.

The basic ideals for a hero, the speaker continued, were liberty, equality, and justice.

"All men have the right to liberty but must respect certain rules of that liberty, recognizing others have the right to their liberty." All are equal in the sight of God, and these two ideals lead to justice, the third ideal. This cluster of ideals are the root of our nation and its government, and true heroes have ideals founded on faith from which rise standards for making heroes. Unless this faith is "rooted in the faith of our fathers" it will - "like a cut flower, - wither and die."

He closed with the suggestion that the guests visit the boys' projects, dogs, rabbits, pigs, and garden, as it was inspiring to see their personal interests and what the boys share.

Gifts Told

Robert C. Watts, Jr., of Lynchburg, vice president of the corporation, announced a number of memorial gifts, among them some from W. C. and E. R. English, of Altavista; Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Gary, of Norfolk, the people of Brookneal, the Public Welfare Foundation of Washington, the American Legion Auxiliary of the 6th District and many others.

Following the singing of the dedicatory-prayer song, "Bless This House," by Mrs. B. Glenn Shutt, Jr., the guests were served punch under the spreading oak trees at the rear of the cottage. The boys of the home conducted the guests through the new colonial brick cottage, with its reception room, office, four bedrooms for the boys, three containing four beds, the other three, bath, and a room for the superintendent and his wife, on the upper floor. Downstairs are the dining area, kitchen, pantry, recreation room, laundry with heating equipment, and bath.

Virginia Democrats List Delegates And Alternates

The Virginia Democratic State Convention meeting Saturday in Richmond elected Congressman Watkins M. Abbitt delegate at large to the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City next month.

Mrs. Calvin H. Robinson, Appomattox, was named alternate at large.

Fourth District Delegates

Fourth district delegates to the national meeting are Attorney John R. Snoddy, Jr., of Buckingham County, George S. Lowry Greensville, Floyd B. Porter, Petersburg, and W. E. Neblett, Lunenburg.

Fourth district alternates are W. A. Watson, Jr., Farmville and L. A. Clements, of Courtland.

Senator Moses Speaks

Senator Charles Moses, Appomattox, spoke against a resolution offered by Edgar Bacon, of the Ninth District, calling for endorsement of Lyndon B. Johnson as President in the 1964 November election.

Moses said that authors of the party pledge did not intend for it to bind Democrats to support candidates who espouse "foreign ideologies". He contended that "Mr. and Mrs. the pledge when he took my rights.

The resolution did carry, however, in a close vote, 633½ to 596½ as the convention added a non-committal report of the resolutions committee.

The committee, headed by Governor Harrison, had passed a resolution recognizing that Johnson "apparently . . . will be nominated" and appealing to him, "in his campaign for election, to support and defend the Jeffersonian principles of separation of powers . . . among the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the government."

State Senator Garland Gray of the Fourth district noted that his district traditionally voted for the Democratic presidential candidate. But he opposed the pro-Johnson resolution.

"We want to know who is going to be the vice presidential nominee", he said.

At the conclusion of the debates, Garland Harwood, secretary of the convention, called the roll of districts to record their votes on Bacon's amendment.

The Second, Ninth and Tenth districts voted unanimously for the resolution. The Third and Fourth districts voted unanimously against it. Other districts split their votes.

Governor Harrison showed no great concern at the floor victory of the endorse-Johnson forces.

He told reporters that a resolutions committee majority, including himself, felt that "it was the better part of wisdom to avoid the apparent distractions to the Virginia delegates at the national convention.

But a convention majority obviously felt differently, he added.

Otherwise his only comment was to reiterate his thought that the committee's version would have given Virginia Democrats a "greater degree of maneuverability" and would have done more to promote party harmony throughout the state.

300 Tour Farms At The Annual Meeting

Approximately fifty Appomattox County farmers, businessmen, and officials were among the 300 persons gathered at Gladys Elementary School for the 13th annual farmer-banker field day, Saturday, July 18.

The event is sponsored by the Blue Ridge Clearing House Association, composed of banks in Lynchburg, Campbell County, Altavista and Appomattox.

A visit to the farm of the Michael brothers, Ray and Paul showed a small family size farm of a diversified operation. At this farm a spokesman pointed out that there is a place in our economy for the small farm if it is properly managed.

A forestry demonstration was also held at the Michael farm.

Two features were stressed at the Myers Farm of Fred Hutcherson. One was a relatively new type of irrigation system. This one, known as a high pressure sprinkler, covered more ground in less time than the usual low pressure types.

The visitors were also shown a mechanical tobacco stringer. This instrument literally sews the leaves of tobacco together on a stick to be hung in the tobacco barn.

A spokesman said the machine can string from one to six sticks in a minute, thus saving a great deal of time. A few are now in use in the bright leaf area. Electricity is the power for the operation.

The committee in charge of arrangements and who acted as spokesmen for the various farm activities included John L. Harrison, Soil Conservation Service, Appomatox.

Town Appoints New Attorney

Town Council Monday night appointed Harry Gordon Lawson, county's Commonwealth Attorney, as attorney to represent the town. Atty. Lawson succeeds the newly appointed Cure n Jones, Judge, County of Amelia, former town attorney, who resigned for the town of Appomattox.

Manager Reports

Town Manager Charles Hunter reported satisfactory progress on the two acre sewage lagoon now under construction near Annie Street on land purchased from Ellen Johnson.

Building permits were granted to J. E. Jamerson and Sons for the Carver-Price School addition, and to two private householders, Ned LeGrand and Percy Thompson who plan to add porches to their homes.

Sewage-Water Permits

J. T. Paulette and J. E. Jamerson were given a permit for water and sewage for a proposed 'Top Treat' frozen custard stand.

A permit was approved for a sign for a "Dairy Queen" stand for Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Paulette.

Council voted to change one ordinance, Article 8, Section 2-66 of the Town Code, (page 27). They voted to delete this article and substitute in lieu of it the following: "The Town Attorney shall have been admitted to practice in the Courts of the State."

Steak Tonight For Lions And Ladies

Il's Steak Night tonight for Lions and their Ladies, of Appomattox. Steak supper is set for 6:30 at Elliott's Lake, in case of rain it will be held at Grinels Motor Co.

Fourth District Elects Officers

All districts in the state elected new officers at their caucuses prior to the state convention Saturday.

The 4th District caucus adopted a resolution requesting President Johnston to stand on Jeffersonian principles of states rights and to keep the balance under constitutional principles.

It defeated, however, a Hopewell delegation resolution calling on U. S. Senators Byrd and Robertson and Rep. Watkins M. Abbitt to take the lead in endorsing the nominees of the Democratic Party.

Nominated as delegates to the Democratic National Convention were John R. Snoddy, Jr., of Buckingham, George S. Lowry, of Emporia, Floyd B. Porter, of Petersburg and W. E. Neblett of Keysbridge.

Nominated for alternates were W. A. Watson, Jr., of Farmville, and L. A. Clements of Courtland.

N. G. Hutcheson of Mecklenburg was named a presidential elector.

Gov. A. S. Harrison, Jr., of Brunswick, Ernest H. Goodrich, of Surry and State Sen. Charles T. Moses of Appomattox were named as 4th District representatives on the State Convention Resolutions Committee which the governor is expected to head.

W. M. Camp, of Southampton, W. B. Blandford, of Powhatan, and William Bolte, of Dinwiddie, were named to the Credentials Committee. G. L. Wyche, of Prince George, John Henry Powell of Nansemond, and George O. Hardy, of Amelia, were named to the Permanent Organization Committee.

Named as the district's representatives on the State Central Committee were State Sen. Garland Gray of Sussex, Harrison, L. A. Irby, of Nottoway, E. Floyd Yates, of Powhatan, Virginia Jeffreys, of Mecklenburg, Mrs. Russell Wages, of Appomattox, R. F. B. Steele, of Petersburg, Vernon C. Womack, of Prince Edward and W. P. Griffin, of Suffolk.
